Alcohol: death of a dream

By Katie Kendall

On Easter weekend of 1994, Kim Lombardi and his family's lives were changed forever. On that Friday night, Lombardi's son Jaydn was one of three teenagers killed in a drunken driving accident in Omaha, Neb. Jaydn was a sophomore in high school and only 16 years old.

Lombardi, who spoke at Clarke during Alcohol Awareness Week, used a slide show to help him tell his story. As he talked about his son from the time he was a baby until the day he died, the audience participated in the family's personal moments. The audience went on vacation and celebrated birthdays with the family and eventually went to the funeral of Jaydn Lombardi.

Lombardi described his son as tough, funny, laid back and sensitive. He loved telling jokes and being the center of attention. Jaydn was gifted in drawing, music and football. Jaydn was described as always giving 100 percent in everything he did. He was the only son in a family of three children and Lombardi said he and Jaydn were extremely close. Lombardi said it is Jaydn's smile he misses the most.

The accident that took Jaydn's life occurred when the driver of the car lost control at 107 m.p.h. and hit a tree while airborne. Jaydn suffered a massive blow to the head and died instantly. Lombardi said that because he had no visible injuries paramedics worked on Jaydn for 20 minutes trying to save him. The two people in the backseat of the car, (one of whom was Jaydn's best friend, Matt) flew out of the car and hit their heads on a tree and also died instantly. Lombardi said the driver of the car was in critical condition. She eventually went to court and pleaded not guilty because she could not remember the accident. She was ultimately charged with three counts of vehicular homicide and received six months probation, Lombardi said. She was also only 16 years old.

Six months after the death of his son, Lombardi began traveling around the nation to speak about his experience. The more Lombardi spoke, the more he began to educate himself on the "powers" of alcohol. For the small number of people who attended Lombardi's presentation, walking out of the lecture hall unaffected was nearly impossible. It was especially difficult for a few members of the audience because they had known Jaydn. According to Bob Squiers, "Jaydn was a cousin of a guy from Bellevue and he had come up a few summers ago to stay with his relatives. It was definitely strange hearing about the death of someone I had once known."

The presentation was also difficult for the rest of the audience.

"I am 21 and I feel like I will think about everything Mr. Lombardi said each time I go out. Having a designated driver seems a lot more important when you hear a story like this. People always have this idea in their head that nothing bad will ever happen to them," said Julie Shank.

According to Lombardi, alcohol related deaths are the leading cause of death among teenagers. He said the average age for adolescents to take their first drink is 13 years old. One out of five high school students will have a drinking problem by the time they graduate, he said. And of the people who drink between the ages of 13 and 21, 92 percent of them will drink for the rest of their lives, Lombardi said. While he said his life will never be the same, he has one message:

"I am a simple man with a sobering message. This country has a drinking problem and I will do my part to try and affect one life at a time," Lombardi said.

McEneaney joins staff

By Maria Ortiz-Lleras

Alumna Colleen Mary McEneaney is the new Clarke peace and justice coordinator. She graduated in May 1996 with a bachelor's degree in psychology and a minor in English.

Her purpose as a peace and justice coordinator is to provide spiritual guidance, leadership and support to the Clarke community.

"Here in campus ministry students have a friend, and a resource," she said.

McEneaney has been involved in campus ministry life since she was a little girl. Her family always made her aware of other people's needs and problems.

"For example, at winter time we pray for the poor and the homeless people," she said.

She volunteered in high school as a tutor for low income students and was part of the Campus Ministry Board.

As a student at Clarke, McEneaney participated in a lot of community service and conferences. She participated in many Hunger-Clean Up regional and nationals conferences.

This year's Hunger-Clean Up is going to be held in April.

Other activities that McEneaney participated in as a student and now organizes are the community service trips. Because of Clarke's new calendar changes on spring and Easter break, this year the Hosed House, Appalachia Mountains, and Washington, DC trips are all in the same week.

Antioch, a retreat open for college aged students of all denominations, "gives students an opportunity to know more about God, themselves and others," McEneaney said. The Antioch retreat is going to be held on Nov. 15, 16 and 17.

The Antioch retreat is a chance for students to listen, talk, and better understand what it means to be a Christian.

As a student McEneaney said she remembers one of the most interesting things that "touched" her was her trip to Hosed House her junior year.

"Every night we went to the shelter home and played cards with homeless people. Our last night there, a homeless drunk man sat next to me. His name was Carl. He explained to me that his mom just died, cried with me and we hugged like friends. I realized that we hug our friends when they need us, and I gave him support and a hug as my friend," she said.

McEneaney's message for the Clarke community is that "I hope for other people to know that I am here and I am a link to resources outside and inside Clarke College. I want to educate and create awareness among each other."

Students interested in these activities can contact McEneaney at extension 8186 or visit her in the campus ministry center in lower level Mary Josita, Mondays, Tuesdays and Fridays, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Begin planning now for spring co-ops

By David Kintzle

Clarke career services is not just a job. It can be an adventure in learning.

The Cooperative Education Program at Clarke will have meetings on Nov. 13 and 15 for students interested in spring placements.

Cooperative education at Clarke has been in operation for over 20 years. Currently, seven Clarke students are participating in the program.

One of the goals of co-op is to provide the student with a positive educational experience while receiving on-the-job training in a selected discipline.

Laura F. Kestner, director of career services at Clarke, said that this experience allows the students to receive course credit and also gain valuable career experience.

To earn credit, a syllabus is written by the student. It contains three to five objectives that the participant would like to realize from the experience, Kestner said. It also outlines expectations and terms of the employment experience. Credit is accumulated as the criteria is achieved.

During the semester, a series of reports are handed in to the co-op office, located in Career Placement, outlining the student's progress and experiences.

These materials include an initial progress report, a mid-term evaluation by the employer, a second student progress report, a student final evaluation of the work experience, a final student evaluation and the employers final evaluation of the students job performance. All will be evaluated to determine the final grade.

Throughout the placement, the employer is given the opportunity to evaluate not only the student but also the company's role in the student's development.

When students are accepted to the program they receive an acceptance letter from Kestner that outlines what the student can expect during the semester. Students are reminded that they are representatives of Clarke while on the job. Personal attitude and effort will have an impact on placement availability for future students.

Kestner reminds students, in the appointment letter, that they are viewed by the company as an entry-level employee. Attributes such as a neat appearance and a positive attitude will not only help them to get along with co-workers, it will also encourage participating businesses to work with future students.

Students sometimes overlook an important opportunity provided by co-op education: building a portfolio.

"The portfolio is a purposeful collection of student work that tells of the student's efforts, progress and achievements," said Randy Ness, director of field studies at Messiah College in Grantham, Pennsylvania. When done correctly the portfolio is a powerful tool that allows future employers to see what skills the student can offer to the company.

Another way the student can benefit the company is by working on specific tasks that would be assigned to full-time experienced employers who could be used in other capacities.

Co-op participants do develop job skills. Nationwide 80 percent of students are offered employment as a result of their co-op experience, Kestner said.

According to the College Sponsored Experiential Learning guide, co-op education can help the student in many ways. It provides the student with specific job abilities, the student can explore career options, the students horizons are broadened, students learn interpersonal skills, they are able to learn in a local environment, they learn to take responsibility and can refine needed job skills.

The Clarke students currently in placement are filling a variety of positions.

Stephanie Greenwood is a teacher of religious education at St. Joseph the Worker School, Jennifer Rutledge is a communications intern at KFXA-KFWB. Richard Osborne is a management intern at Dubuque Sash and Door MFG. Inc., Veronica McAvoys is a clerk in the clerk of court office, Anthony Hilkin is a youth care worker with Hillcrest Family Services. Aimee Rodgers is a customer services representative at Walt Disney World.

If interested in these opportunities, Kestner suggests that students discuss this option with their academic advisor. Kestner also invites students to make an appointment with her to discuss availability. The Career Services office is located in the lower level of Mary Josita. ♦

Senior events 96

By Angie Bicker

An Iowa basketball game and a trip to the Williamsburg outlet mall are among the various activities planned for the senior class this semester.

The senior pictures were discussed at the senior class meeting on Thursday, Oct. 24 in the Union. Kris Hodapp, president of the senior class, said the pictures that have been taken will be back within a week and can be picked up at the switchboard. She said a retake day will be Nov. 6 for the senior pictures.

The officers have also planned various activities that the seniors can do as a class. Hodapp said there will be a trip to the Tanger outlet mall in Williamsburg Nov. 9. She said the trip will last a couple of hours and then the students will come back to campus by van.

An Iowa basketball game has also been planned and vans will be provided for transportation on Dec. 7 or 14. She said the cost of tickets depends on who is playing and what day it is on. Hodapp said the most students would have to pay is $6 or $7 because the class treasury has enough to cover most of the charge.

Demetris McCoy, vice president, said a senior dance with a disc jockey will be held at the Union the second week of December.

There will also be a contest for making up a motto for the senior t-shirt. "The motto will be chosen at the end of the semester and the winner will receive a prize of $25," Hodapp said.

Curt Dunnam, secretary and treasurer, said the entries for the motto can be turned in anytime to him or Hodapp.

Hodapp said other activities that are being considered for the seniors are horseback riding, a bowling night, camping, and a movie night to a local theater.

Students that attended the meeting also said what being a senior means to them.

"I'm excited to leave so I won't have to study constantly anymore. The education was good, sound, and I learned about life," Keith Touzinsky, a biology major, said.

Anne Schickert, a sociology major, said the year is going so fast and it is scary to think that the people that have been around here for four years will no longer be at her fingertips.

"I'm very nervous about going to graduate school and about leaving my best friends behind. I hope I will like graduate school just as much as Clarke," Amy Jackson, a social work major, said. ♦

*Resnick debuts musical:
'Sketches from a Drawing Room' opens to community*

By Angie Bicker
David Resnick is the composer of "Sketches from a Drawing Room," a production that focuses on Iowa's Sesquicentennial event and opens Nov. 7 at the Grand Theater located at 135 W. Eighth St.

"Sketches from a Drawing Room" is a musical that is set in Dubuque 150 years ago.

"I have had an idea for a musical piece where the action would occur in one place. There were certain people who were looking for a show and I took the idea and plugged it into the Sesquicentennial," David Resnick, a Clarke music instructor and instrumental ensemble director, said.

He said he always wanted to write a musical and likes how the audience reacts to the performance.

Meanwhile, the musical project also has a personal meaning for the composer. "I am interested in history and I know that this place, the world, and country has a great deal to do with the others who worked hard before us," Resnick said.

Besides Resnick's personal views, "Sketches from a Drawing Room" follows a house through many changes from 1846 to 1996. Resnick said the first scene begins with the mayor of Dubuque in 1846 throwing a party for Iowa's statehood. He said it changes ownership and serves as a Literary Association, doctor's office, speakeasy, funeral home, coffee house, and finally a family's home.

In addition to the various scenes in the musical, the show will also have intermission entertainment. Resnick said slides will be shown of Dubuque spanning each era the house goes through.

Another important aspect of the musical is the cast of 19 members. "I've invited people from the community who would be right for the show. They have proved to be professionals and willing to work on a new project," he said.

In addition to the musical, Resnick has also received support from the college community. He said he is grateful for all the support and feels blessed to be here.

"Sketches from a Drawing Room" will run November 7-10 and 14-17 at the Grand Theater. Resnick said the curtain will go up at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday, 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and 2 p.m. on Sunday. Tickets are available by calling the Grand Theatre box office at (319) 588-1305. The cost is $10 per ticket. ♦

Halloween madness invades Clarke

By Ryan Pierson

Last Friday night, the 1996-97 men's and women's basketball teams started the season off with Midnight Madness. Games and contests for the Clarke students and faculty and the men's and women's basketball teams gave them a chance to showcase some of their talent for the upcoming season.

Midnight Madness was put together by Tina Kuhle, the head women's basketball coach and Jon Davison, the head men's basketball coach.

"It tickled me to death to see the enthusiasm of the fans there last Friday night," Davison said.

Kuhle said the turnout for Midnight Madness was even better than what she had expected. Davison said about 450 people showed up for the event.

"I thought the fan participation was outstanding and I hope this is an indication of what the fan support will be like during the upcoming season," said Bob Squiers, a member of the men's basketball team.

Shean Albrecht, a member of the 1996-97 men's basketball team, said more people showed up than he had expected and he hoped it got the community excited for this the upcoming season. ♦

Signs of Intelligence

Clarke College will present the Riverside Theatre Production of "The Search for Signs of Intelligent Life in the Universe" on Friday, Nov. 8, at 7:30 p.m. in the Jansen Music Hall on the Clarke campus. Admission is free.

"The Search for Signs of Intelligent Life in the Universe" is a cosmic comedy by Jane Wagner. This one-woman tour-de-force is a funny, poignant and nutty cavalcade of characters romping through a generation of social history. Riverside Theatre is a professional theatre company now in its fifteenth year in Iowa City, where "The Search for Signs" premiered in May 1995 before embarking on its Midwestern tour.

Jane Wagner's wacky parade of 13 characters is led by Trudy, a homeless woman with insights on everything from quantum physics to panty hose. Trudy explains her free-wheeling commentary: "I made some studies, and reality is the leading cause of stress amongst those in touch with it. I can take it in small doses, but as a lifestyle I found it too confining." Other characters who offer their unique perspectives are Chrissy, a devotee of health clubs and self-help seminars; Angus Angst, an unhappy 15-year old punk rocker; Lud and Marie, Angus' perplexed grandparents; and Kate, who suffers from "rich people's burnout."

Both a side splitting comedy and a chronicle of the human heart, "The Search for Signs" won the New York Drama Desk and Drama Critic's Circle Awards.

This production is sponsored by Clarke College's Cultural Events Series. It is performed by Jody Hovland, a founder and now executive director of Riverside Theater, whose other one-woman shows include "Shirley Valentine" and "First Lady Lou." Her performance drew nightly sold-out audiences in Iowa City and received tremendous critical acclaim. The Daily Iowan calls her performance "chaotically brilliant and frenetically funny...she draws us into her world and closer to the human truths that bind us." The Iowa City Press-Citizen declares that Hovland "turns in a remarkable performance, commanding the stage with energy, artistry and seemingly endless variety." ♦

New coach brings new attitude

By Julie Bex

The men's basketball team at Clarke has a new look along with a new attitude. This attitude was brought in by Jon Davison, Clarke's head coach, who came on as coach this summer.

"The first ingredient to a successful team is the right attitude," Davison said. Davison said he got this idea from an attitude card and an inspirational speaker, Rich Wilkins.

"The new attitude is what we need to make a successful team and season," junior Brett Jondle said.

"I want to put it on their minds every day that they should think positively about themselves and their teammates," card at all times.

"His winning attitude made us have a new attitude toward basketball. Under his coaching we believe we can win," senior Jervis Hayes said.

"This new attitude isn't all about basketball, it's about life also," Davison said. Davison said that self-esteem leads to success. If the players doubt themselves it won't work, and that is a reflection of their attitude.

"This new attitude isn't all about basketball, it's about life also," Davison said.

"I am very pleased with the attitude I have seen in the pre-season. Everything was perfect, everyone working hard, and looking forward to the season," Davison said.

"Our new attitude is a combination of the skills that both the coaches and players possess for a successful season," junior Delta McGee said.

The key to a successful season requires team unity. Davison said he instills this in his players by encouraging team togetherness. They went golfing, participated in Midnight Madness, and had a faculty cleanup day.

"I am really excited about being at Clarke. It is nice to belong to a community that has such a caring attitude, and I just want to be a part of the new attitude," Davison said. ♦

Perez also pointed out that the men have currently tied their number of wins from last year with two games remaining.

The Athlete of the Week honor is shared by two different athletes for the week of Oct. 28-Nov. 1. Brad Havertape and Ben Meier, both Dubuque natives, are being recognized for their performances on the men's golf team.

Havertape, a Dubuque Hempstead graduate, was the top Clarke finisher at the conference meet, only three strokes out of medal contention. He finished with a total of 167.

Meier, a Wahlert graduate, had a solid performance finishing fifth individually with a total of 170 strokes.

The men's golf team traveled to the Aldeen Golf Club in Rockford, Ill., on Oct. 11 and 12 for the conference tournament. Clarke finished third, only nine strokes behind second place finisher, Eureka College. Jon Davison, men's golf team coach, stated, "Our golf team has made great strides this season. Students

By Katie Kendall
While most students at Clarke as are the word 'hospital' with sick, hurt, pain, some students could call Mercy Finley Hospitals in Dubuque their second homes.

Junior and senior student nurses spend part of their week at Mercy Finley doing what is called their clinical work. It is there that student nurses are applying what they have learned in classroom to real-life situations. They are taking vital signs to giving shots, and nurses are preparing themselves for future profession.

Jennifer McGreevey, a junior nursing major, spends two days a week at Mercy Hospital. She is usually there from 8 p.m. until 8 or 9 p.m. While McGreevey can either be found on the medical floor or in obstetrics. According to Jennifer the medical floor is a place where people with different types of diseases are being taken care of.

"For example, this is where people with kidney and respiratory failure are being taken care of," McGreevey said. While there, student nurses are able to perform procedures such as insert catheters.

Friends

Friends of Arne Bunkofsky gathered in the Sacred Heart Chapel Wednesday, Nov. 6, for a memorial service to remember the Clarke student who died recently. They remembered, shared and reflected on the many contributions Bunkofsky made in their lives. They told of a man who determined even in the face of adversity, he would move on from there. They told of a man who was not a stranger to adversity. He developed diabetes 12 years ago.
